EDUCATION IN MOROCCO

WWW.MOROCCORELOSERVICES.COM

We outline for you the various offers to help you choose to the best system for your children

The French mission

The Agence pour l'Enseignement Français à l'Étranger "AEFE" system is present in Casablanca, Rabat, Marrakech, Meknès and Agadir. The education is provided in French mainly and English. The network comprises schools accredited by the French Ministry of National Education.

The Jewish school

Jewish schools are one of the oldest system in Morocco. When he arrived in Morocco (1946), Rabbi Isaak Rouche (1906 -1983) who supervised Jewish studies, said "it is in Morocco where the largest community in North Africa is located, We could not have opened this school elsewhere" It was then that the Hebraic Normal School was born in 1946 under the leadership of Samuel D. Levy. As a training school, it abandoned its original vocation around 1967 to become a classical school. Other schools opened later in the city of Casablanca: the Maimounide high school and the Narcissi Leven School.

The American school

The American school is present in Morocco since several decades years (1962 in Rabat, 1973 in Casablanca) and it is considered as the one of the most expensive ones. Commonly, the children of the American diplomacy are enrolled in this school.

The Spanish school

11 Spanish schools exist in Morocco one of which in Casablanca and Rabat, most of the rest is located in the North of Morocco.

The British school

The International British school of Casablanca opened in 2016, provides a multicultural and enriching education.

14 Public universities

Private Universities : the International university and Mondiapolis university

Engineering schools : Ecole Centrale Casablanca, and Polytechnique school Bengurir.....

High Business Schools : ENCG, ISCAE, HEM and ESSEC in Rabat.

The story of Jewish saints of Morocco

Morocco, land of saints: history and origin of the Jewish saints of Morocco

The author of this remarkable historical sum, Elie Azoulay devoted several years of intensive research on this subject which fascinated him since he was a child. We cannot talk about Morocco; investigate the habits and customs of a community which has left this country en masse for Israel, Europe and America without referring to one of the most specific phenomena of this country: the worship of saints. "If this work is read by Sephardic Jewish youth from Moroccan parents, who know little or nothing about Morocco and its saints, if it reaches this generation totally assimilated to the habits and customs of the country where it was born and predestined to be the necessary link for the safeguard of Moroccan Jewish identity and heritage then the years of hard work that I dedicated to the writing of this book will not have been in vain. I would then have achieved my goal and I will derive my greatest satisfaction from it"

Today at a time when cultural globalization is in full swing, many communities are fighting fiercely to preserve their religious cultural and historical heritage.

A good number of young Sephardes of Moroccan origin do not recognize the richness of the liturgical and socio-historical cultural heritage that their ancestors bequeathed to them.

In Israel and in certain Moroccan Jewish communities in the Diaspora, this is the case in Montreal, cultural associations and Judeo-Moroccan synagogues are trying to perpetuate this wonderful heritage.

All is not lost! This educational work must be pursued relentlessly, especially with our young people to ensure the sustainability of Moroccan religious, liturgical and cultural traditions, explains in an interview : Elie Azoulay.

Our natural resources

- André Labry seems to have started from a very simple observation: while the economy of some countries depends on a single production (cocoa, coffee, copper, oil ...) the extreme diversity of the soils and climates of Morocco enables it a wide variety of crops. A part from agriculture, Morocco presents a true mosaic of natural resources: sea fishing (3% of GDP, 1st rank in Africa).
